The new School of Science and Technology will take in its first batch of students next year.

There will be places for about 200 students through the Direct Schools Admission exercise in May.

The SST is also working closely with NTU and Ngee Ann polytechnic on methods like project work and problem-based learning.

NTU president Su Guaning says the SST will nurture a new generation of students who can make a difference.

“I can see developing a new way of educating captains of industry capable of taking Singapore deep into the knowledge economy. I am confident that the School will be a well-established premier institution, helping Singapore compete vigorously on the world stage.”
