Summary

NTU has unveiled an ambitious masterplan to transform its Yunnan Garden campus into a mini city in the next 15 years. There is even a possibility of having a light rail system leading into the university. The NTU's masterplan includes provisions for a possible light rail system, which it hopes could be up in 10 years.

Electric buses and electric bikes may also ply the campus roads. There will also be pedestrian walkways criss-crossing through a network of ponds and parks. The heart of the campus will be a snaking structure -- called the Campus Centre -- which would feature cafes, shops, a pub and even a cinema, all located near academic and residential facilities.

Incoming president and provost Bertil Andersson said he hopes there would be more interaction in the university.
