SINGAPORE: Singapore's Nanyang Technological University (NTU) will showcase its research innovations to the public for two days starting Wednesday.

Science buffs can head for the varsity's Research Techno Plaza to view the latest inventions by researchers.

These include the prototype of a mobile teleconferencing robot and a clothes simulation software that lets designers virtually create fashion items.

The technology showcase marks the unveiling of the university's Institute for Media Innovation.

NTU said it hopes to attract commercial partners — through the showcase — who may be able to find applications for their inventions.
