NTU's first engineering class to launch book, raise funds

Updated 01:07 PM Apr 11, 2012

by Woo Sian Boon

SINGAPORE - A new book aimed to inspire Singapore's young generation to study engineering has been launched by the pioneer engineering graduates of Nanyang Technological University, which was formerly known as Nanyang Technological Institute.

The pioneer class of '85 also hopes to raise S$500,000 which will then be matched dollar for dollar by the government for a new NTU Student Leadership Fund. The Student Leadership Fund will benefit student leaders in general, and engineering graduates in particular. Royalties from the book will also be used for activities such as conferences to encourage an engineering education.

Copyright 2012 MediaCorp Pte Ltd | All Rights Reserved