

THE STRAITS TIMES, 11 AUG 2016, PAGE A2

What'sNext

NTU's 1st medical batch leaves its mark

To commemorate its first batch of medical undergraduates admitted in August 2013, Nanyang Technological University is today unveiling a 25m-long art installation made in part by the students themselves. The students, who are contributing individual ceramic pieces which signify how they see the role of medicine, studied pottery under Dr Suriani Suratman and Ms Hiroko Mita, two proteges of master potter Iskandar Jalil.