NTU'S 1ST MEDICAL BATCH LEAVES ITS MARK

To commemorate its first batch of medical undergraduates admitted in August 2013, Nanyang Technological University is unveiling a 25m-long art installation on Thursday (Aug 11), made in part by the students themselves.

The students, who are contributing individual ceramic pieces which signify how they see the role of medicine, studied pottery under Dr Suriani Suratman and Ms Hiroko Mita, two proteges of master potter Iskandar Jalil.
