Blue Solutions, a subsidiary of the Bolloré Group, and Nanyang Technological University in Singapore, are launching Asia's first rail and catenary-free tram line. The Bluetram, already tested on the Champs-Élysées, in Paris, in 2015, on the occasion of the COP 21, had seduced many Parisians. In Singapore, this two-kilometer line, with two stations, will be tested for two years. "The introduction of electric public transport is becoming more and more common around the world. They are an ideal solution for achieving a more efficient transportation system and reducing greenhouse gas emissions," said Professor Subra Suresh, President of Nanyang Technological University.
