

WRATH

INSTEAD of clouting voodoo dolls, unleash your fury by joining the Singapore Complaints Choir. No, you don't have to be Hady Mirza to do this. To perform your rants with fellow Singaporeans, e-mail info@singaporefringe.com or call 6440 8115 to register. The only complaint here? The government has recently imposed a rule, disallowing foreigners to join.

WHAT have Greek art statues got to do with lust? Plenty. After all, Aphrodite, the Greek goddess of love, beauty and sexual rapture, was the one who inspired lust among mankind. Catch the rare Greek masterpieces for the first time in Southeast-Asia at the National Museum of Singapore before they return home to the Louvre after March 16th. For $8, you can admire the full aesthetic beauty of these gods and goddesses just as the visitors to the Louvre museum view them.

GLUTTONY

IF YOU are planning to splurge on a buffet, you might as well settle for the best. Elegant surroundings, top-notch service and visually-enticing halal cuisines, Carousel (Royal Plaza on Scotts) is the answer to indulging yourself in a range of tantalising delights, from fresh succulent seafood to savoury designer desserts served in liquor shot cups. Dining at Carousel means forking out more than $50 for lunch, high-tea or dinner. To make the most of your money, be early for your meal session so you can feast to your heart's content in this 24-hour buffet restaurant that was voted best last year in The Straits Times.

Seven days in Sin City

Who says Singapore is all about keeping a squeaky clean image? Estelle Low and Aw Hui Min show you that the seven deadly sins can be some wicked fun to indulge in during the upcoming break

THINK that the juiciest prawns can only be obtained from the wet market? Think again. Get hooked on fishing for your own prawns at Bishan Park. At $30 for three hours, you can barbeque your catches instantly with a barbeque pit in close vicinity. Marination is not required as the prawns there are huge and succulent and will leave you hankering for more. Weekdays hail the best catch as you do not have to compete with other prawners.

GREED

ENVY

THE latest iconic attraction in town have some of us turning into green-eyed monsters this recess week. Although the Singapore Flyer is slated to open on March 1st, throngs of people have already booked their tickets for the ride. Those whose companies were willing to pay $9,000 per capsule for its inaugural run on February 11th are the lucky ones who got to ride for free. Others, who had their special someone splurging $399 a couple ticket, enjoyed a romantic evening accompanied by a panoramic view this Valentine's Day. We intended to get tickets before its official launch, but all had already been snapped up by corporate bookings.

SPEND a day at Spa Esprit @ House (located at 8D Dempsey Road). Nourish your skin with Budapest Customised Facial ($150 for 60 min; $220 for 90 min), where your skin gets assessed by a therapist and a slew of ingredients (pumpkin, orange, rosehip, sweet rose, paprika and quince) wait to be slathered on you. Pair this up with Kajogal Massage ($120 for 60 min) to make up for the gym sessions you have missed. This massage, designed by yoga guru Dr Kajal and therapists at House, combines 20 yoga poses to oxygenate and give your muscles a gratifying stretch.

SLOTH

SICK of the sharp turns and rude shocks that plague your 179 journeys? It's time to arrive in vogue, with your hair in place. Call for the Chrysler 300, the longest limousine in Singapore to ferry you and your friends to the hottest parties in town. Measuring over eight metres, the Chrysler 300 offers a mini-lounge ambience, which includes a mini bar and plasma TV system. Fork out $350 per hour ($488 per hour on Fridays and Saturdays from 8pm) for your personal moment of glory. We leave it to you.
