Environmental research award

THE Nanyang Technological University (NTU) has set up an award for doctoral-level environmental and sustainability research with funding from the World Future Foundation (WFF).

The US$50,000 (S$70,000) donation from the Singapore-registered charity foundation will be shared among the top five completed PhD theses this year in areas related to the environment, sustainability and metropolis of the future.

WFF’s chairman, Dr Feng Lun, said: “We are pleased to collaborate with NTU, a renowned university for environmental and sustainability research and well known too for producing many scholars and future scientists in this important field.

“This partnership also underlies the shared vision and passion that WFF and NTU have on environmental protection and sustainable development and our understanding of the urgent need to address issues confronting mankind and the environment.”
