The S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) has emerged third in Asia in a ranking of global think tanks.

The Global 'Go-To Think Tanks' rankings ranks more than 1,000 Asian think tanks and is conducted by the University of Pennsylvania's Think Tank and Civil Societies Programme. The programme aims to identify and rank the leading think tanks of the world.

RSIS, a graduate school of Nanyang Technological University, focuses its research on the security and stability of the Asia-Pacific region, and their implications for Singapore and other countries in the region.

"The ranking is a milestone in RSIS' growth as a professional graduate school of international affairs and a leading think tank in the region," said Ambassador Barry Desker, Dean of RSIS.

Coming first in the rankings is The Japan Institute of International Affairs. The Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, located in China, came in second.

The criteria for the rankings include academic reputation, success in generating innovative policy ideas and access to elites in policymaking, media and academia.

The rankings were tabulated after collating the nominations of a panel of experts comprising scholars, executives, public and private donors and policymakers.
