

Assistant Professor Aron Meltzner from the Nanyang Technological University's Earth Observatory of Singapore looking at a coral microatoll at low tide on Sentosa. ST PHOTO: LIM YAOHUI

SCIENCE

NTU team studies Sentosa corals for clues on sea level change

A research team from the Nanyang Technological University has been studying coral microatolls in South-east Asian countries – including Singapore – to determine the region's sea level histories. The data could help researchers piece together the likely reasons for sea level change and make better predictions for future sea level changes. B8