

SUBSCRIBE... to the newspaper and our e-mail newsletter
Click here

Thu, September 2, 2010

Search here...

Archive Search

Welcome Guest | JG Login

The Benefits of an Aging Population in Asia

Bill Durodie | August 31, 2010

Related articles

Crisis Watch: US Must Wean Itself Off Asian Credit
5:18pm Feb 21, 2010

Even at \$1,000 Per Pot, Japan Creams Rising to the Top
12:25am Dec 30, 2009

Indonesian Nurses in Japan Criticize Tough Exams
5:57pm Aug 3, 2010

Paul Krugman: Turning Japanese a Possibility for US
8:06pm May 21, 2010

Indonesia Eyes Gas Promised to Japan
9:16pm May 7, 2010

Share This Page

Post a comment

Please login to post comment

Comments

Be the first to write your opinion!

Much of the discussion in the West about aging populations also occurs in Asia. Yves Guerard, the secretary general of the International Actuarial Association, has compared these discussions to climate change; he sees the issue of an aging population as a "big, immediate urgent problem" that is largely ignored "because it's inconvenient."

But a recent report challenges this framing. This considers the benefits of an aging population.

Concerns regarding aging populations typically focus on three areas: health costs, pension costs and intergenerational solidarity.

The presumption is that these are all stretched when, as in Japan, the amount of the population aged over 65 reaches above 20 percent.

In reality, age is not a purely chronological or even biological matter. It has a social dimension that often goes unappreciated.

What it means to be 70 today is quite different to what it would have meant a generation ago, when a life of toiling in the fields or in a factory would have taken its toll on the human body.

Today, many people of pensionable age want to and do keep contributing to society.

This may not always be measured in terms of GDP as their contribution typically takes the form of free childcare for their grandchildren, but this important social bonding mechanism should not be overlooked.

The simplistic dependency ratio favored by many demographers, that naively divides the number aged below 16 (or 18) and those above 60 (or 65) by the remainder (who are presumed to be at work) is highly limited and flawed.

For a start such figures pay little attention to those of working age that society either chooses to keep out of the workforce (students and early retirees), or those it is unable to integrate (the unemployed and women in the absence of adequate childcare facilities).

Accordingly, the ratio can fluctuate wildly based on socio-economic and cultural conditions, rather than demographic changes.

As the ratio decreases, it may be due to the fact that those in work today are far more productive than previously — meaning fewer people support many more than before.

Even an economy that grows at a sluggish rate of 3 percent per annum will, compounded over a 25 year period, be more than twice as large as it is today.

MOST READ | BREAKING NEWS

Diva Siti Nurhaliza Saddened by Indonesia-Malaysia Tension

Saudis Ask Obama to Free Compatriot Jailed for Abusing Indonesian Maid

New DPR Office Building to Include Pool, Spa to Get Legislators 'Blood Flowing'

Tifatul's War on Porn Enlists 10 New Soldiers

Newly Inaugurated Indonesian Lawmaker Blows First Day on Job

Yudhoyono to Address Malaysians from Indonesia Military Headquarters

Jakarta's Controversial Buddha Bar Ordered Closed

American Suspect in Mosque Quarrel Claims Innocence

Anggodo Indonesian Graft Ruling Leaves Puzzle

Mom Kills Herself and Toddler Over Big Debt

VIDEOS

The Colors of Ramadhan

FPI Blames Media for Biased Reports

Meet Twitter Activist Fahira Idris

But it is unlikely that the number of those aged over 65 will double, or that it is expected to divert all new resources to them.

Accordingly, whether society is able to meet the changing needs of its population is more to do with effective planning than the population alarmists appear to countenance.

Japan, the country with the oldest population in Asia, and the first to face this demographic transition, shows how it is possible to encompass an aging demographic in a nation's stride.

People the world over live longer and healthier lives than ever before. This should be a cause for celebration rather than concern. What health care costs do ensue are now more concentrated in the last years of life than previously.

As the old nuclear family, with all its problems and limitations, comes under strain, there is little evidence to show that this is affecting family bonds, which are held to be so important in Asia.

Rather, new technologies have replaced some face-to-face contact in families.

None of this is to suggest that there are no new tensions to negotiate. Nor is it to suggest that there are some extreme cases of elder-abuse or neglect that tend to feature prominently in the media.

Nevertheless, if, as advanced and developing societies, the countries of Asia are to make judicious decisions about how they invest their resources, they would do well to learn from the strategies used in Japan and to base their decisions on real-life experience rather than the anticipation of worst-case scenarios.

East Asia Forum

Bill Durodie is Senior Fellow at the Centre for Non-Traditional Security Studies of the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies at Nanyang Technological University, Singapore.

PHOTOS

Plans to make state oil and gas company Pertamina a non-listed public company have been delayed while the government formulates regulations and criteria for such companies. (JG Photo/Afriadi Hikmal)

RECENT COMMENTS

2:13am | American Suspect in Mosque Qua...

Blare the propaganda towers, voice the rhetoric, why not plant one on every corner of the street while we're at it, teach the children how to be good little boys ...

1:12am | Tifutul's War on Porn Enlists ...

Ask the Saudis..they sure know how to block sites deemed non-islamic...This country will soon be a mirror of Saudi Arabia...

1:05am | Saudis Ask Obama to Free Compa...

Sacre Bleu...The Saudis believe that their Islamic law should override the US laws, and convincing the court that the sentencing of their own was too harsh and racist...Therefore ...

12:17am | Karim Raslan: View From Malays...

and how is provocation by medias show a nation's complexity again?

10:10pm | Saudis Ask Obama to Free Compa...

What about the Indonesian lawmaker which planned to interfere the Malaysian judicial process?.. in the name of so-called Human Right? What was the difference then? hope this is not ...

9:59pm | Sleep-Deprived American Pulls ...
SirAnthonyKnown-Bender - re censorship. Sama Sama